

Green products, green living, green marketing. Is green a fad or here to stay? In September 2010, IMI International completed its latest ConsumerTrack™ study on Environmental Marketing across Canada, USA, UK and Australia. This study of 2,400+ consumers helps shed some light on how consumers are acting towards the environment, how green marketing affects product purchasing and consumer attitudes toward the environment and green brands and products. Below you will find excerpts from both the global and UK reports as well as an overview of the key issues examined in the full report.

United Kingdom Environmental Marketing Insights

% of UK consumers 55 – 64 who state they are highly environmentally friendly

57%

% of UK consumers who have had an environmental home audit (of those who are able to)

46%

% of UK consumers who agree they are buying more environmentally friendly products vs. a year ago

46%

Age group that is least likely to believe that it is essentially/very important for companies to offer green products

45 - 54

Gender that is less likely to know if the products they purchase contribute to environmental damage

Females

Global Environmental Marketing Insights

Marketing Tactic Effectiveness

% consumers who have purchased a product due to...

Special Price	75%
Loyalty Program	62%
Sampling	49%
Environmentally Friendly	48%

Environmental Concern

% of consumers who believe that the environment is one of the top issues facing consumers today

Our global study shows that, among the 4 regions examined, a strong number of consumers are purchasing environmentally friendly products and feel the environment is a top priority. There are, however, limitations that suggest consumers will only go so far when it comes to products that are good for the environment.

Key Study Perspectives

- Identify what environmental activities consumers take part in
- Understand how consumers feel product categories fit with being environmentally friendly and which categories they look for environmentally friendly options
- Identify how willing consumers are to switch brands for environmentally friendly options when the environmentally friendly product costs: i) the same ii) more
- Identify attitudes toward the environment and environmentally friendly companies
- Understand what consumers are looking for companies to do with regards to the environment
